Angela Airall is a Fellow of Oxford Leadership Academy, USA.

She brings over 20 years consulting experience in leadership development, strategic culture change, team building, executive coaching, learning systems, and diversity.

Angela's consulting emphasises the development of individuals, teams, organisations and industries. Her passions include:

- Creating residential leadership development programmes that create breakthroughs for leaders and for organisations.
- Coaching clients and leaders to reach their fullest potential.
- Supporting new leader transitions and assimilations to senior roles.
- Assessment, support and challenge of leaders as they navigate transition periods.

Appointed as the first Chief Learning Officer for Girl Scouts USA and holding prior positions in organisational consulting at Johnson & Johnson, Angela helps organisations pioneer new initiatives that redefine and reposition industries. She is an innovator that brings new concepts and ideas from the imagination of R&D to execution and market opportunity.

At Johnson & Johnson, Angela consulted with business leaders across the consumer, medical device and pharmaceutical sectors in the launch of Leader-View, a customised high potential programme supporting global talent management.

Angela managed the merger integration of three utility companies in a regulatory environment.

At Educational Testing Service, Angela pioneered the launch of diversified revenue streams. As architect of Destination MBA for 10 years helping women advance in business careers, Angela has published three official business guides.

At The Center for Creative Leadership (CCL), Angela co-designed the Leadership for High Performing Teams Program and Leadership for the Human Resource Professional.

Angela is author of 'Teams at Work' published by Pfeiffer & Co and contributing author to 'Leadership: The Eleanor Roosevelt Way'.

She is co-founder of the National Society of Hispanic MBAs and is a member of the NJ OD Network, Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Inc.

Angela was nominated as Trainer of the Year by The American Society of Training and Development (a nationwide programme to develop OD practitioners).

Angela is certified in a number of psychological assessments used in executive coaching, Trust & Betrayal in the Workplace technology, Fearless Living, GESTALT and National Training Laboratory.

Angela is a graduate of the University of Southern California with and has an MBA in Organizational Behaviour and an MS in Marketing from Boston University. She holds numerous training programme certifications and is a graduate of the Executive Management Program at Harvard Business School.
